

Rev. S. Griffin,

Canaan, Aug. 23, 1818.

Dear Sir,

My <sup>son</sup> brought me yours of to day in reply to mine of this morning; and I must say I am pleased with the gentlemanly spirit in which it is written. I fully appreciate your situation, since being your explanation. The truth is, neither of us anticipated such an accumulation of communications. When I wrote out my first reply, I did so, because I saw Mr. S. would be much longer in getting through, than I expected; and I thought I could commence and publish the two first Nos. of my reply, before he closed; and by the time the two first Nos. of mine were published, he would be through and I could then go on.

I am disposed to make every allowance, when I think there is an honest intention to do me justice; and I have no complaints to make as to your course towards me in this controversy, except publishing the piece of True American; and I attribute that to the fact, that you were under the impression that giving the name whom called upon would do as well, as putting the signature there in the beginning. There is however a great difference, especially in such a case as this where the writer ~~is a witness~~ and details the testimony of a witness whose name is not given.
Suppose you give <sup>me</sup> ~~my~~ individually the name, I cannot publish it to all the readers of the paper; and perhaps there may be men in Oregon who read your paper and who know the witness to be unworthy of credit, and who would inform me of the fact, if the name was given in your paper. I have been myself the editor of a paper, and I never in all my experience, to my recollection, knew a quarrel serious charge made against an individual under a fictitious signature. I wish you to publish the names of the witness and the witness, that I may be ready to pay my respects to them, at the proper time.

It is difficult for an editor to satisfy all parties, especially when different sides of a question are discussed through his columns. I feel a great sympathy with those editors who are endeavoring to promote a generous, just, and enlightened cause. I will always be disposed to do them justice. And now might I be, relying upon your generosity and justice, and seeing the delicate situation in which you have been unexpectedly placed, not by your own fault, but by circumstances, I shall not be forward in complaining of your editorial course. If I should think myself decidedly injured, I will first apply to you for redress, before I complain to the public & hope you will do the same.
Neither this, nor the note this morning, was intended for publication.
I am respectfully,
P. N. D.
